DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Fort Chiswell Mansion is set on a small promontory near Reed Creek between Lick Mountain and Draper Mountain. The house was located near what formerly was the old Valley Pike which was later enlarged to become U. S. Route 11. In recent years Route 11 was incorporated into Interstate Highway 81, and the further expansion of this highway facility has encroached unfavorably on the house. Despite this encroachment the house retains a pastoral setting with splendid views of the surrounding countryside and mountains.

The house itself is a two-story brick structure set on a foundation of irregular coursed limestone. The brick is laid in very even Flemish bond on the front (north) and west walls, and in American bond on all the other portions. Most of the architectural details show a blending of Roman Revival and Greek Revival forms, and are provincial in design. This blending is especially evident in the two-story diastyle portico which is composed of two provincial Greek Doric columns supporting a pediment without architrave or frieze. The tympanum of the pediment features a D window with interlacing tracery nearly identical in appearance to that which Thomas Jefferson designed for Pavilion IV at the University of Virginia. The one-story Italianate bracketed porches on the front and west walls appear to be very early additions. A distinguishing feature of the house is the step-gable ends, each of which incorporates a pair of slightly projecting end chimneys. On the attic level of each gable is a large three-part semi-circular arched window. The rear of the house has a two-story ell and a frame gallery. Attached to the house's east side at the basement level is a one-story brick kitchen which retains its large fireplace. Beyond the kitchen is a brick smokehouse.

The interior of Fort Chiswell has a central hall plan with two uneven size rooms on each side. The impressive staircase at the end of the hall ascends in an open well to the attic, and has scrolled stair ends and fascia boards. Nearly all the door and window trim throughout the house features planed Greek Revival-style architraves with turned corner blocks. The mantels are generally heavy in proportion and have Roman details.

Fort Chiswell has been little altered or added to, and is in a good state of preservation.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

SEE INSTRUCTIONS

One of the outstanding landmarks of Southwest Virginia, Fort Chiswell Mansion was built 1839-1840 by two brothers on land they had inherited from their father. The two brothers, Stephen McGavock (1807-1880) and Joseph Cloyd McGavock (1813-1886); built their imposing house on a hill overlooking the original McGavock home on the property. The first McGavock settlement had occurred in 1771 when James McGavock (1728-1812) of Rockbridge County moved to the area and purchased the old Fort Chiswell tract which had first been developed by William Byrd III and Colonel John Chiswell as a frontier post to protect a lead mine that Chiswell had discovered in 1756. A portion of the original tract, including the frontier settlement, later passed into the hands of Alexander Sayers, and it was from Sayers' estate that McGavock purchased the property in 1771.

James McGavock prospered there and Fort Chiswell became one of the important stopping places on the great Wilderness Road to the West. Here McGavock ran an ordinary and other commercial establishments and when Montgomery County was formed in 1777 the first court met at his house. The county court was to continue until 1789 when Wythe County was formed.

The home of James McGavock later passed into the possession of his son, James McGavock, Jr., (1764-1838) who lived there until his death. This original homeplace was to continue in the possession of the McGavock family until its destruction by fire in 1901. When James McGavock, Jr., died in 1838 a portion of his property was left to two unmarried sons. It was these two sons who immediately launched the ambitious project of building the imposing Fort Chiswell Mansion across the road from the original family seat.

In 1839 the two brothers made a contract whereby "Lorain Thorn and James Johnson bind themselves to make and lay for ... Steve and Cloyd McGavock, 300,000 sand brick of best quality to build the proposed building in a handsome workman like style -- $2.75 per thousand -- and themselves to lay same in handsome style with round joints and handsome arches turning over all outside doors and windows. Work to be completed by middle July 1840."

Apparently the house was finished on schedule and it remained in the hands of the McGavock family until it was sold in 1918. Throughout the nineteenth century it was well known as a centre of hospitality and the main house of an extensive and prosperous plantation.
